Hi, my name is Erin Le Roux, and I am a second-year Graphic Design student.

Welcome to my Digital Drawing Portfolio. This portfolio showcases a variety of projects, including character design, digital illustration for editorial and packaging design, editorial magazine covers and double-page spreads, drawing for animation, and an illustration journal.

These projects demonstrate my creative development and technical skills through the use of Adobe Photoshop, Adobe Illustrator, Adobe InDesign, Adobe Premiere Pro, Adobe Animate, and After Effects.

NERINA

BACKSTORY :

Nerina was born during a rare moon eclipse, an event which creates sirens who could travel between both worlds. In the ocean world many inhabitants installed fear in her, that humans and the world beyond were extremely dangerous, something she should never explore or go near. But that didn't let her fascination dwindle, she was drawn to the land, she believes she was born like this for a reason. In the day, when the sirens slept, she explored near the shore, seeing surfboards, and feet playing in the water. One night a sea drill near her kingdom destroyed her home that had been there for centuries; the ocean blamed the humans, even Nerina blamed them. During that night, the Heart Of The Sea was stolen. Without The Heart, the sea would die. One of the sirens betrayed the kingdom and stole The Heart and gave it to the humans. Nerina must go on a journey, as one of the only sirens who can walk on the land, to find it. She doesn't know who to trust, humans and sirens alike, and that's going to be one of her obstacles she must face, as

- well as others to reclaim The Heart Of The Sea.

TSOTSI'S TRANSFORMATION ARTICAL - LITTLE WHITE LIES

The brief required me to take a publication and do 2 editorial double page spreads, and well as the publication cover, in the design style of the publication, in this case Little White Lies. As well as taking a South African article relevant to the publication. Since Little White Lies is a film publication, I chose the film Tsotsi.

TSOTSI ANALYSIS

"There were lights in those eyes. Where there had been darkness there was something like light"

As the plot progresses, we come to see that the baby is a catalyst for Tsotsi's self-discovery. The baby represents innocence, kindness, and the positives of human nature, just like David, which was Tsotsi's name before becoming a gangster. Tsotsi recognizes that and names the baby after his past self. The baby helps Tsotsi towards becoming David again by teaching him simple life lessons such as caring, nurturing, and responsibility for others. He reveals his change brought on by the baby when he talks to Boston in chapter 11: "There were lights in those eyes. Where there had been darkness there was something like light."

Tsotsi nurtures the baby with milk and cleans the baby, which proves this new compassionate outlook. Tsotsi goes home and finds the baby in poor condition, covered in ants. Realizing it needs a mother's care, he observes the line-up for water, trying to pick a woman who would suffice. He decides on Miriam, and at first, she is reluctant to help. He must threaten the life of her own child, showing he hasn't fully changed as a man. In the last chapter, he goes to Miriam to feed the baby, and she opens up to him, explaining how her husband is dead and she accepts that she must move on. "I mean, we got to live."

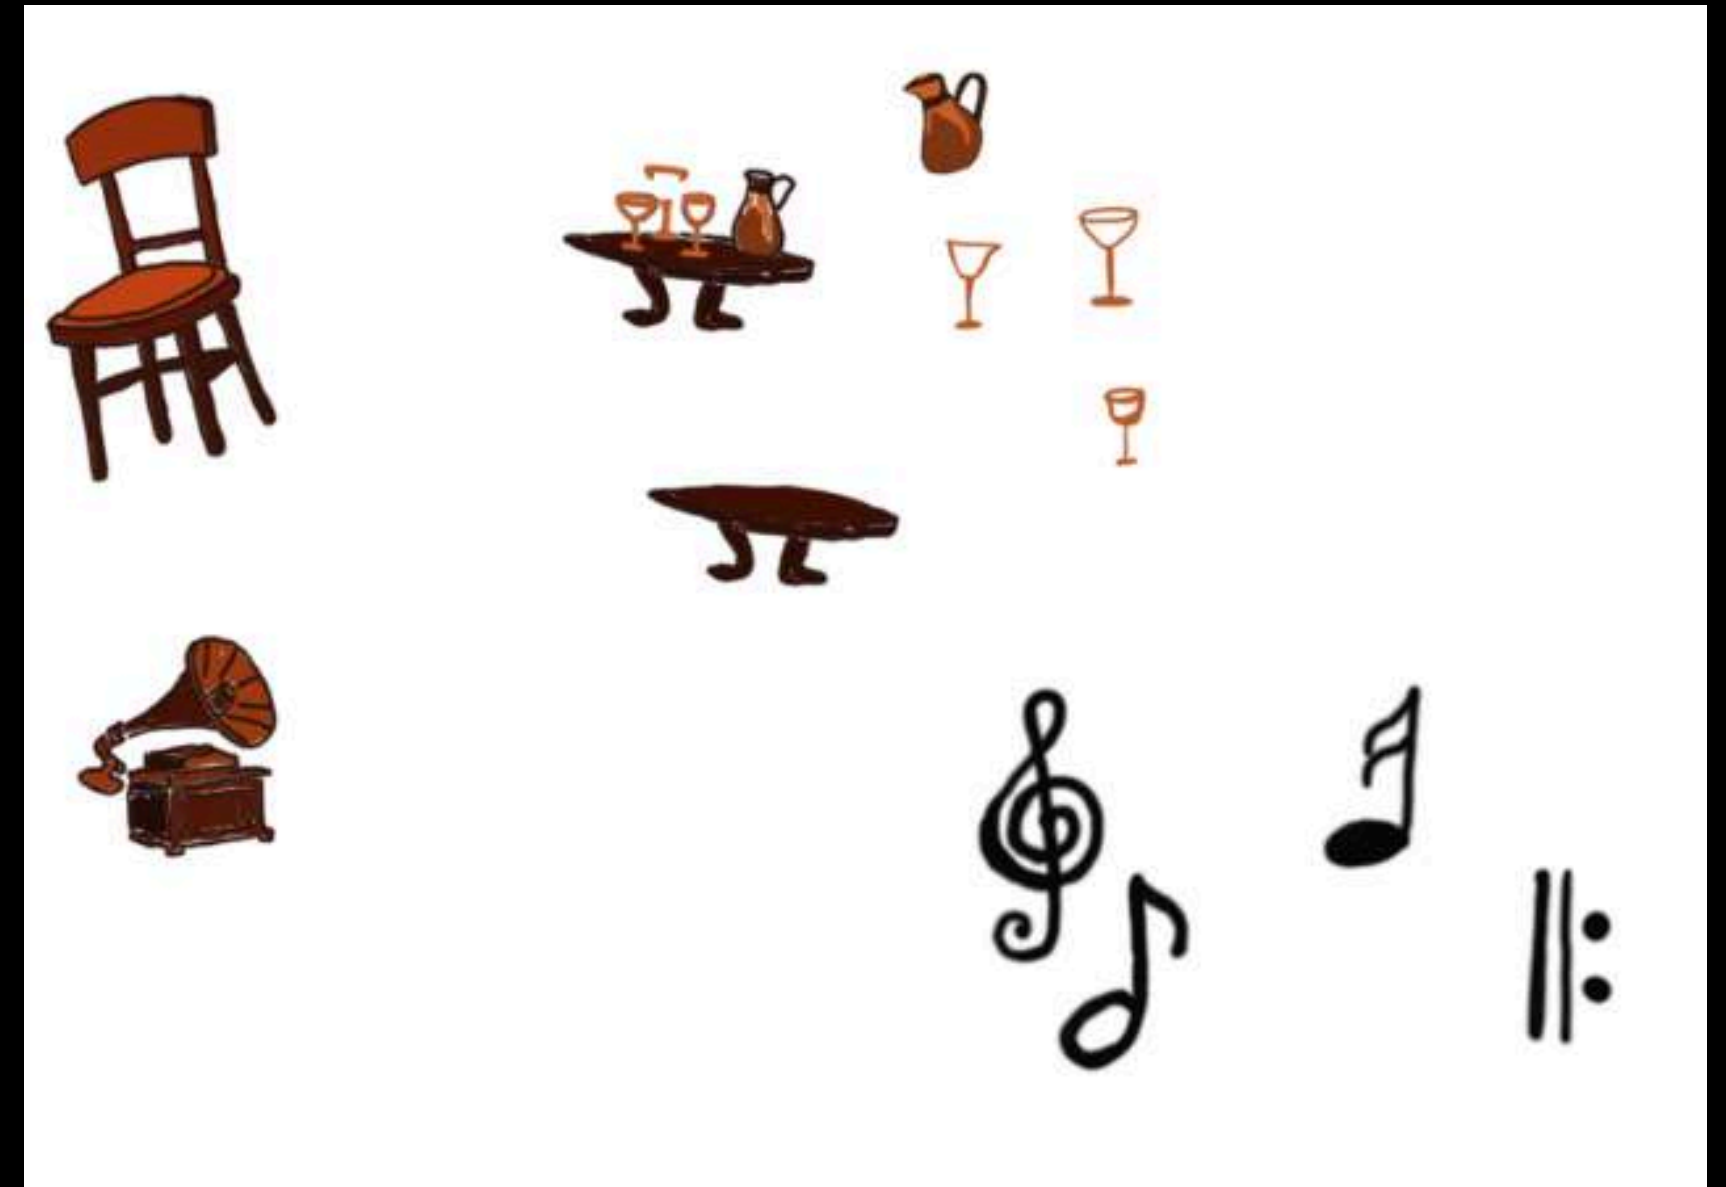

The baby also represents the spirithood of Africa because he is the one who reveals Tsotsi's past. It forced Tsotsi to choose violence when he was a little kid. The police came and took his mother away because she didn't have a passport, representing the blacks' instability economically and socially. Their lives could be uprooted by the white expansion any day, and they lived in fear of frequent raids.
