ABOUT THE PROJECT

This project required us to create a short film of 3 to 3.30 minutes. We had to develop a short found footage film from concept to completion.

The Language Of Hands

Ideation

GENRE : experimental visual essay , found footage documentary

PREMISE : hands as an emotional language

A person filming a documentary of the intimacy as well as the contradiction of human nature through their hands. How hands pose as their own language without the use of dialogue. It's non-narrative; however, entirely symbolic.

The sections of how this film would be set up are inspired almost through a religious lens of the Abrahamic religions: creation, love (romance), care, violence, grief, compassion (kindness), and connection.

Genesis (the creation), expression of the creations of humans and the world (art and passion), love through Adam and Eve (romance), care through motherhood and fatherhood, violence - the exile of Adam and Eve, grief, compassion, and connection.

In the beginning of the film, inspired by the artwork Creation of Adam, two hands barely touching, then the above-discussed sectioning, then at the end, those same hands in the beginning touching. Maybe a quote from William Shakespeare - "Now join your hands, and with your hands your hearts."

The quote at the end of the film is inspired by the series Criminal Minds, where at the end of their work, when they catch the criminal, a quote shows on screen relating to the episode. (It allowed the profilers to step back from the macabre nature of the crimes to process and reflect on the motives, tragedies, and complexities of the human psyche. - Google AI)

So, in this case, it gives the audience something to process at the end of the film.

Quotes :

‘Now join your hands, and with your hands, your hearts.’

-William Shakespeare

King Henry the Sixth part 3 act 4 scene 6

“Know all the theories, master all the techniques, but you touch a human soul, just be another human soul”

-Carl Jung

Target Market :

The primary target audience, are young adults to adults.

They are people who are interested in film, art, human behavior, psychology, philosophy. They are people who enjoy looking into deeper meanings, and art or films that encourage reflection rather than watching a film that spoon feeds their meaning, where there isn't needed to think about after.

Story treatment

GENRE :

experimental visual essay , found footage documentry

PREMISE :

hands as an emotional language

RESEARCH :

Short film: Piano Hands

Why: Showing close-ups of hands, and unintentionally their contradictions, from love and intimacy and passion, to anger and addiction.

Series: Criminal Minds

Why: The quotes at the end of an episode.

Music video: Lucy Rose, Scared Of Loving Wild Again

Why: The use of intimacy shown through hands, found footage feel, very raw, very impactful.

LOG LINE :

In a found footage documentary, human hands become a language instead of dialogue. It reveals creation, intimacy, violence, grief, and compassion through fleeting moments, exposing the beauty as well as contradiction of human nature.

Beginning :

The film starts off with a fade in from a black screen (people breathing, skin friction) to a hand and then another on either side of the screen coming together but never do, like The Creation of Adam.

Creative decision: This sets up the film, opening with one of the strongest visuals of "the language of hands". The Creation of Adam says a lot without any words. It was created too with human hands, as well as the creation, the beginning of Adam, fits with the beginning of this film.

Editing: A slow zoom in on the close, but not touching, fingers.

Audience effect: The beginning will create anticipation through the hands that don't touch. This may bring up feelings of curiosity, with the audience wondering who these people are and why they aren't touching. Because this scene is inspired by The Creation of Adam, the audience may pick that up and reflect on its meaning, the connection, and separation without the use of dialogue. With the slow zoom in on the gap between the hands, bringing more attention to it. This opens the film's central themes from the outset.

continued

Middle :

Section 1: The Genesis - Creation and Expression (Passion): Passion and creation - through art, dance and music, writing. Then the painting The Creation of Adam.

Creative decision: Sound: The sound integration will be diegetic sound, focusing and immersing the viewer into the music being created, or the art being formed.

Editing: Warm, amber colours will be used in the colour grading, communicating energy and passion. The editing will be quicker cuts to convey that energy.

Audience effect: The diegetic sounds of playing music, dancing, writing, and drawing immerse the audience into the physical act of creation. It encourages the audience to focus on the hands as a tool to communicate, rather than a simple body part. The colour grading will evoke feelings of warmth and connection, maybe a sense of pride in the audience's own passion. With this short film being an experimental visual essay, my hope is that the audience recognises the deeper meaning, how hands can express thought, emotions, and identity with no dialogue being used.

continued

Section 2: Love and Romance: Skin friction, hair being pushed back, holding on to each other, pinkies touching together, hugs.

Creative decision: Sound: In this section, I'll make use of both diegetic sounds and music. The diegetic sound will be relevant to each clip, while the music will continue throughout this section to group together this section. In one of the clips, where a couple is on the beach and they touch their pinkies together, the sound before they touch will play, but when they touch, the diegetic sound will stop. This will show how love can rid all outside distractions and focus on just that person. In another clip, 2 hands under a table join together, showing the secret nature of their romance. The audience can hear the people surrounding them, but the camera will solely focus on their hands. In many LGBTQ relationships, this becomes a norm, hiding their relationship to refrain from the negativity that they may face. This scene then becomes very powerful because, despite this, they still choose each other, they still choose love.

Editing: The colour grading will make use of pinky rose tones to communicate innocent and slow love. The editing will be slow and peaceful, so the audience really can immerse themselves in these clips and relate to it through their life.

Audience effect: The audience is encouraged to emotionally connect with the intimate moments that are present on the screen through the combination of the diegetic sound, the music, pink colour grading, and slower-paced editing. The continuous music unifying the section reinforces the feelings of romance and connection for the audience. In the moment where the diegetic sound disappears in the clip of 2 pinkies touching, it emphasises how love can cause the outside world to fade away, which the audience can relate to, drawing them into feelings of focus and emotional closeness. With the slow editing also allowing the audience to see the peace which comes with love, even in domestic, quiet moments, moments that might otherwise go unnoticed, and allowing the audience to reflect on their own experiences of love and human connection. The hidden holding of hands beneath the table, while in a social environment, highlights the challenges faced by some couples, especially within LGBTQ relationships. They still choose each other despite external judgement, celebrating the courage and resilience of choosing love despite everything against them. This becomes a powerful statement, showing how hands function as an emotional language that is capable of expressing what words cannot.

continued

Section 3: Mother and Fatherhood: Child grabbing finger, braiding hair, elderly hands holding their child's hands, fingers tracing their child's face.

Creative decision: Sound: The sound in this section will make use of both diegetic sound and music. Like before, the diegetic sound will be relevant to each clip, while the music will encompass this whole section, unifying this section together.

The creative decision here is to show love through the lens of the parent. In the audience's case, they can either relate to the child, bringing a nostalgic feeling, from when they were little to the present, or can relate to the parent, seeing their child in some clips. One of the clips incorporates an adult child with their parent because parenthood never ceases; that love will continue and remain present throughout their life.

Editing: I will make use of a more teal to blue colour grading. This allows different emotions based on the individual's experience. The colour grading can bring out feelings of nostalgia, calmness or peace, or the stability that a parent(s), or parenthood, has brought that person. These clips will also be edited slowly to express the calmness and allow the audience to reflect on their love for their children or parent, as well as feel that gratitude. With the clips just focusing on the hands, it's easier for the audience to picture themselves in these situations.

Audience effect: Through diegetic sounds and the continuity of the music, the audience gets immersed in intimate moments of care and affection between parents and their children.

Depending on the audience's own life experiences, they may identify with the child receiving love or the parent providing it, making this section universally meaningful. The slow-paced editing allows the audience to reflect and emotionally engage with this section. Through the teal-blue colour grading, the audience gets enveloped by feelings of nostalgia, peace, stability, and comfort. When seeing that the film includes both young and adult children, the audience picks up that parenthood is not confined to childhood, as it remains a lifelong expression of love and support. The clips focusing on hands that perform nurturing actions show that parenthood and love are actions communicated without the use of words. The audience is encouraged to reflect on their own relationships with their parents and/or children.

continued

Section 4: Cruelty, Violence: Clenched fists, arguments, bruised knuckles, pushing things off their desk, slamming hands on a car wheel, hands holding fabric, hands fighting to stay being held, but people are taking them away.

Creative decision: Sound: With this section, the sound is going to play a little different compared to the rest of the sections prior. The sound will encompass dark ambient chants that will play throughout the section, as well as distorted fighting noises played through the section, and other sounds relevant to the clips, and banging sounds. This creates a complete contrast from the rest of the film prior. The reason for this sound choice is when one gets angry or rageful, things start merging together, often described as everything goes black, getting taken over by something. In that state, time distorts, so merging the sounds together creates an uneasiness that shocks the viewer because it's such a contrast to the peacefulness of the prior clips and sounds.

Editing: The colour grading will be a harsh, eyesore red, communicating violence and rage. The clips will get faster and faster with each clip, which in turn creates a sense of unease and anxiety.

Audience effect: The audience had a previous sense of comfort that was established prior to this section. However, with the sudden shift in the sound design, colour grading, and editing, their sense of comfort gets disrupted. With this contrast, the audience will experience a sense of discomfort, tension, and unease, indicative of the emotional state portrayed on screen. When these clips grow faster and faster, the audience may experience a heightened sense of anxiety and anticipation, which actually mirrors how anger builds and consumes a person. Hands are capable of communicating destructive emotions just as powerfully as they communicate love, creativity, and care. The audience is encouraged to take a look at how one's emotional state is communicated through actions, especially harmful actions towards others.

continued

Section 5: Grief: Hands on face, face on hands, hands on floor gripping floor, holding hands, one moved away from the other, hands being placed on either side of a window.

Creative decision: Sound: With this section, the sound needs to provide relief from the previous section. To do this, the first clip in the grief section is a woman ripping a photograph of her and someone else. To stop the previous section's sound, when she rips the photograph, that rip sound stops the previous section's sound. This is also symbolic of ripping the photo of someone who hurt you and finally letting go. All those previous hurtful experiences go, separating yourself from that person. That's also symbolic of the ripping of the photo. The sound design won't contain diegetic sound, only sad music and wails from a person. This is indicative of when experiencing grief, days just merge together, everything seems to be duller, with no essence to life. To show this, her cries will be played through each of the clips.

Editing: The colour grading will be low saturation. During grief, the vibrancy of the world, the excitement, just doesn't exist. The clips will be longer, lingering on that grief, because grief stays for a very long time, sometimes not even going away at all.

Audience effect: Following the overwhelming nature and intensity of the previous section, the audience experiences a sense of emotional release as the sound of the photograph rips through the chaos of the previous section. This moment is both a transition and symbolic of letting go, loss, and separation. The audience should feel the tearing of the photograph as the breaking of a relationship, memory, or connection, and then in turn marking the beginning of the grieving process. The audience may feel feelings of isolation and emotional emptiness because of the now quiet, empty sound of sorrowful music and a woman's cries compared to the last section. The sound design reflects how grief can consume an individual's perception of the world. It causes days to blur together and makes life feel distant and colourless. Many viewers may connect with this sequence through their own experiences of loss, heartbreak, separation, or mourning. This all shows how human hands communicate despair and grief without the use of dialogue.

section 6 : kindness compassion : Wiping tears, hands in prayer, helping someone stand, feeding someone who can't feed themselves, painting a grandmother's fingernails - who can't paint her own nails, giving 2 coffees, one for them and one for another person.

Creative decision: Sound: The sound will contain hopeful music after the events that had occurred before. Because despite everything, hope returns. Kindness in this world is still prevalent, and we can be the kindness in this world.

Editing: The colour grading will return to a warmer colour palette, warm amber tones, showing hope, renewal, and revival.

Audience effect: This section provides a sense of relief, comfort, and emotional healing. The audience is shown how hands are capable of communicating empathy, compassion, and selflessness without the need for dialogue. The audience is left with a sense of optimism, even after the experiences of anger and grief. Human connection, kindness, and hope will forever remain a powerful force that brings people together. Community can aid in healing and provide, in itself, hope.

End :

Return to open visuals, hands that were almost touching, till they finally come together, and the quote: "Know all the theories, master all the techniques, but as soon as you touch a human soul, just be another human soul."

Creative decision: Sound: The sound through this clip will continue from the sound from the last section, really showing how important human kindness is to others, even strangers, to inspire treating everyone with kindness and love, healing individuals and healing the world.

Editing: The clip of the hands coming together will have the exact same colour grading as the first scene, the first scene as the introduction and the last scene as the full stop, summing up the film altogether. Then, after, the quote will appear, allowing the audience to reflect on this film and hopefully notice the beauty of the language of hands throughout their life.

Audience effect: The final scene will provide emotional closure to the journey that the audience went through throughout the film. The audience is reminded of the first clip and all the questions they might have had, but now answering those questions themselves. This resolution of the hands touching symbolises understanding, connection, healing, and unity, and in turn that creates a sense of fulfilment. Then the appearance of the quote makes the audience pause and reflect on the themes explored, and reflect on the significance of human connection within their own lives, how they treat people, or simply just observing the language of hands that show more than the actual words being said.

SOUND INTERGRATION

I edited the audio in After Effects. In Premiere Pro, the sound was too glitchy.

SOUND INTERGRATION

- Align the title card, maybe edit that in After Effects for kinetic typography.
- Same with the quote.
- Fix the beginning sound.
- Remove the sparkle sound.
- Make the one image stay on screen a little longer.
- Add more paintings and sculptures.
- Remove the "ough" sound.
- Change the last section's colour grading to a warmer orange.
- Modify some of the sounds, especially the ocean scene, to be more impactful.

Micro trailer

ideation:

For the trailer i was thinking of adding another layer to the film. the contradiction, which isnt imedialty picked up if your not in that mindset. the whole preface of the film is to not spoon feed meaning, but the audience comes up whith their own. so the film can mean many things, the langue of hands, however for the trailor i want to hilight the contridiction, how the same hands that love hurt, same hands that pray sin, which can be portained to the short film . but now in this case how your hands say something that your words wont, the deciptio behind words. phyciolocly body langauge is harder to hid than the words spoken, this can be taken on any level, paretaing to the audeinces mindest, it can be pastrined to daily life or politiccal figures, or power hungry people, or people in power. and due to this i feel it adds another layer of dissection for the film

“ the hands “

“the’re talking “

“they saying eveything your words wont “

“are you listening yet “

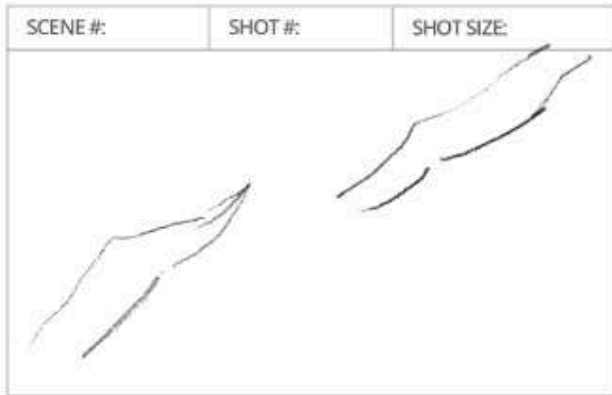

these words give a lot of lee way , because again it leaves the film up for interpretations, it isnt directly saying that this film will be anout the contradiction of human nature, its more proveing a piont that hands tell their own story, actually no, how hands tell our story, and express themselves just life the spoken lanauge. i think its important not to push a minset of the audience, so when they whatch the film there whatching it through that lense, that lense needs to be broad, so they can see and anaylise the film, based on their current mindset and they may come back to the film in a diffrent mindset and see something else. its imporatnt not to show what the hands mean, but what do the hands mean to the audience. for example someone may whatch the parenthood setion, and say this reminds me of my mom, another my whatch it and say iv nver had this. someone may whatch the section of the two people hold hands under the table, some may see romance, or relisence and bravery, some may see secracy, i havent changed the film, the audience has, and thats beautfil, beacuse the meaning hanst been given, they are giving it, so thats why i want this trailor to be broad, desipite it being condence, beauce i want that hermeneutics. and thats what i think gives a film value, all good films have a rewatch value, because theirs something more to go back on, like the fiml “ bones and all “ its not a surface level film, its a thinking film, the meaning isnt given, u give meaning to it, and thats what makes its a good film, its extremly controverial, however the target audience looks deeper and finds meaning, based on their own mindest and experiances.

Micro trailer

creative decisions :

Section 1:

The trailer begins with the rendition of the Creation of Adam; however, the hands don't touch. There would be a vintage film overlay to show how timeless hands have been to convey emotions.

Creative decision – Sound: The sound would be that of an old film projector. This creates mystery and anticipation.

Editing: Straight after this section, the transition to the next will be a fast, sharp white light. This shifts the trailer from stillness into an emotional montage.

Audience affect: With the type saying the hands..., this creates curiosity and pushes the audience to start asking questions and meaning about the hands.

Micro trailer

creative decisions :

Section 2:

The visual is going to be quick cuts or a montage of shots of creation, love, conflict, and grief. Then, after this, will be more shots in the reversed order and quicker than the shots before. A heartbeat will also be playing and increasing in sound and beats.

Creative decision – Sound: With the raising heartbeat in sound, it builds emotional intensity and tension.

Editing: The editing is fast-paced and gets faster with the following section, demonstrating that there is a fast language that goes unnoticed, but it's so prevalent in everyday life. It's all around, and to show this, it's fast. There will also be black cards in some sections, such as, They're talking. They're saying everything your words will not.

Audience affects: The audience will feel hopeful. The power of non-verbal communication and the fast-paced editing keep audiences engaged.

Micro trailer

creative decisions :

Section 3:

There's a pause, showing a black screen to allow relief and breathing room, even reflection before the conclusion, which would be the hands from the first scene touching.

Creative decision – Sound: From the silence to an exhale. Relief from the tense sound design in the previous section, allowing the audience to exhale as well. It also emphasises the emotional impact of the moment.

Editing: The black screen before the hands builds anticipation for what is about to follow, and emphasises the point of the shot with the hands touching, and the words Are you listening yet? really encourage the audience to go on noticing how powerful hands are in communication, whether they conflict, or emphasise, or even if they lie.

Audience affect: Provides emotional release for the viewers.

reflections :

Throughout this project, I was challenged creatively and technically as something I haven't experienced before. This was my first time creating a short film in any way or even coming up with a solid idea and ideation for a short film. I learnt so much, from creating a story treatment, to colour grading, to footage sourcing and creating everything seamlessly together.

I explored many concepts for this project and eventually decided on The Language of Hands. I really admired and enjoy films that make me think at the end of it, where the meaning of the film was direct and meaning was created through the audience's lens. For me, what makes a good film is the ability to make me think for hours or days after watching it and have discussions with others and hear their meaning. I think it is really such a beautiful thing. So I wanted to try to incorporate that into this film.

Overall, I have become more confident with using Premiere Pro and After Effects. This experience, and exploring different ideas, helped me almost find something that I'm drawn to and is essentially my creative voice. From when I first started to now, I see such an improvement, and I'm so grateful I got to do this module. I will continue learning and creating short films after this project has ended, and learn even more and grow even more.

IDEA 1 : THE LANGUAGE OF HANDS

[back to

Ideation

GENRE : romance

Language of Hands is entirely a romance shown through hand gestures and the red string theory. In the beginning, one hand comes into view, then the other. The male hand first tries to make a move, goes in to hold the woman's hand, but hesitates and never touches her. Then his hand leaves and comes back with a flower. At this point, you can see both of their hands have a red string; however, you cannot see that it is connected to each other.

The woman takes the flower and gives it to her other hand out of view. Their fingers point to one another as if reaching. Their hands move closer in, still not touching. Her fingers move towards his. They're touching; however, her hand is extended, but his is turned towards his side. She moves her other hand into frame to the other side of his hand, then moves both hands away.

The man follows hers. Their fingertips touch, then slide into each other, while his other hand comes in, holding both the top and bottom of her hands. Their fingers interwine, then slide on top of each other, as he bends down into frame and kisses her hand. Their bodies come into the frame, and she trails her hand over his arm to his neck, and his to her waist, now showing the full extent of the red string connected to each other.

Story treatment

GENRE :

romance

RESEARCH :

Film: In the Mood for Love

Why: Emotional tension instead of the use of dialogue.

Film: Your Name

Why: Fate and symbolic connection.

Music Video: Lucy Rose, Scared Of Loving Wild Again

Why: The use of intimacy shown through hands.

Music Video: I Need Your Love, Calvin Harris and Ellie Goulding

Why: The found footage inspiration, camera picking up on experiences.

LOG LINE :

After missing a train, a stranger films the station and accidentally captures a connection forming between two other people, with a red string revealing their fate as they connect with each other, not with words but with their hands.

Story treatment

Beginging:

The film begins abruptly through the perspective of a phone camera inside a train station. The footage is shaky as the person filming runs towards the train that had just departed.

The filmer is out of breath and a little annoyed. He records the train station as he jokes about missing the train. The camera pans over the train station, showing the crowd, the train tracks, the station lights, then stopping on two strangers standing close together. They do not talk to each other, and they seem calm and content right next to each other, as opposed to the chaos of the station.

The filmer becomes curious and notices how close their hands are to each other. The camera zooms in shakily to their hands. While zooming in, a faint red string is flickering across their fingers.

The visual language is introduced to the audience: the hands that function as emotional communication, the red string theory, how the red string symbolizes fate and connection, and the found footage perspective.

Creative decisions (in the beginning): Unstable handheld movement, phone microphone audio, ambient train station sounds.

Story treatment

Middle :

As the filmer continues at a distance, the interaction between these 2 strangers develops not through dialogue but through the touch and gestures of their hands.

One hand comes into view, then the other. The male hand first tries to make a move, goes in to hold the woman's hand, but hesitates and never touches her. Then his hand leaves and comes back with a flower. At this point, you can see both of their hands have a red string; however, you cannot see it's connected to each other. The woman takes the flower and gives it to her other hand out of view. Their fingers point to one another as if reaching. Their hands move closer in, still not touching. Her fingers move towards his. They're touching; however, her hand is extended, but his is turned towards his side. She moves her other hand into the frame to the other side of his hand, then moves both hands away. The man follows hers. Their fingertips touch, then slide into each other, while his other hand comes in holding both the top and bottom of her hands. Their fingers intertwine, then slide on top of each other. He bends down, coming into frame, to kiss her hand. (As he kisses her hand, his face comes into frame. The filmer lowers the camera slightly to avoid any more of his face being shown and whispers, "Oh.")

Audience: The audience feels as if they are watching with the filmer. It humanizes the filmer as he is a witness to this interaction (making him emotionally real), while being reminded that this is found footage. It gives the sense that we shouldn't be watching this interaction, as it is intimate. The audience feels emotional attachment to the interaction despite a lack of dialogue.

Editing during this time: Small camera imperfections, filmer breathing, camera struggling to focus in some areas, and some unstable camera movements. The red string remains subtle.

Sound design: Station ambience softens, train announcements become distant, ambient music fades in.

Story treatment

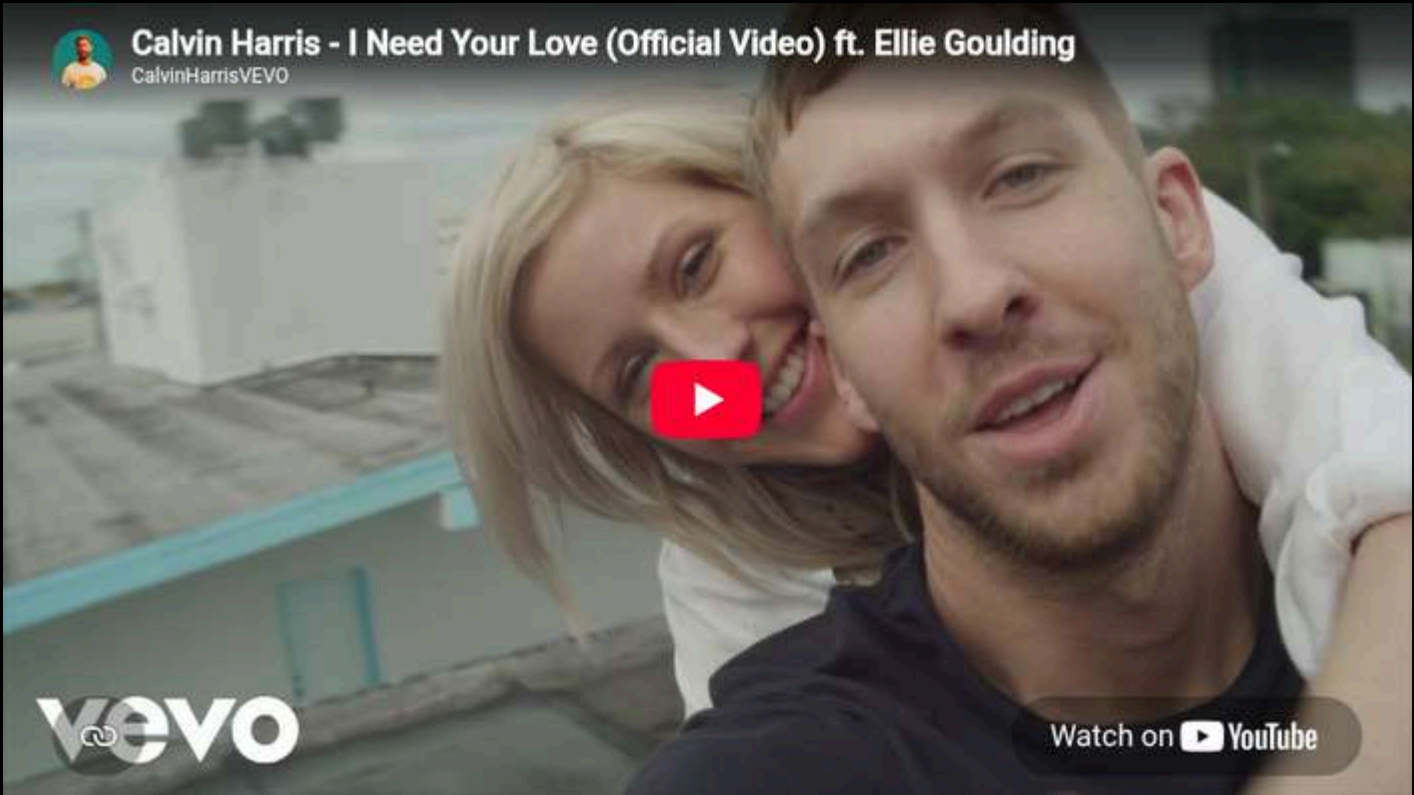

End :

A train arrives at the station. The crowds begin to move between the camera and the couple, and around the couple, disrupting the moment for the filmer and audience. The filmer thinks that the moment is over and lowers the phone. After a pause, the camera rises up again.

The couple is standing fully turned to one another, and the red string is now being clearly shown. The woman slowly trails her hand along the man's arm to his neck, as his hands travel around her waist. Showing fully that the red string is connected to one another, that their meeting is fated. The footage goes out of focus as we hear the filmer say softly that his phone is going to die, and it cuts to black.

IDEA 2 : YOUR LIPS TO MY EARS

[back to

Ideation

GENRE : phycological thriller

Kori gets home from work. She's tired, she's drained. She goes to the bathroom to wash her hands. She gets this weird impulse to do it again and again and again. She cannot stop herself. She looks in the mirror while washing her hands briefly, then she opens the bathroom door, and she gets that same impulse: open, walk out, go in, open, walk out. The camera is cutting, fast editing. Then she goes and washes her hands again and looks in the mirror, and it's distorted.

She runs away from the bathroom. She's freaked out and pours herself a glass of red wine, which she chugs immediately, then starts cutting onions. She starts splitting and sees multiple versions of herself cutting the onion. She starts cutting it really fast and nips her finger. She goes and pours water on it. She then puts the onions on the hot pan and tries to calm herself down.

She starts pouring a bath and leaves the taps to run. She takes the onions off the stove and switches the stove off. She puts a record on the record player, and the scene transitions into a dance, her hair done, makeup on, in a beautiful black dress dancing with her boyfriend. Things get steamy, and as they are making out, she snaps back to reality from a message from her boyfriend. She's in the same position as she was while making out. It feels so real for her, but she snapped out of it, only to find that her onions, that she thought she took off the stove, are burning.

She's freaked out and grabs the wine glass that she just finished and is now full again. She goes to the bathroom, where she has a bath. She messages her boyfriend back, saying she's tired and won't be able to make it tonight, and she starts splitting in the bath.

Eventually, it goes black, and you see her in a black room curled up, with her personalities' hands trying to grab her. She's crying. We see a golden light appear on her hand, and she puts it to her heart slowly. Her eyes are closed, and she is transported to nature, where now you see that she is at peace.

She is crying tears of joy because she thinks it's over. She sits at the base of a tree and closes her eyes, smiling, finally at peace.

She snaps out of it, waking up sitting on the floor, her back resting against her bed, from a message from her boyfriend. The camera cuts to her personalities one by one grabbing the phone. She grabs her hair and lets out a crying yell, and then the short film is done.

Story treatment

GENRE :

psychological thriller

LOG LINE :

A young woman creates video diaries to try to anchor herself in reality as her perception and identity begin to fracture. However, as her recordings grow increasingly contradictory, she finds herself no longer trusting her own memory or the evidence she leaves behind.

Story treatment

Beginning:

The film begins when someone clicks on one of Kori's video diaries, her latest one titled: Video Diary 102: Your Lips to My Ear.

The video begins by showing her coming home from work. She looks exhausted and emotionally drained. She puts her bags down and goes to the bathroom. She starts washing her hands but gets a compulsion to repeat it. She washes her hands again and again.

The footage starts cutting, slightly skipping some moments and slightly changing angles. She looks in the mirror briefly but feels something isn't right. She knows full well that she's going to have an episode but doesn't want to believe it. She stops and opens the bathroom door, but she needs to wash her hands again, so she goes back and begins washing.

As she's doing that, she looks in the mirror. The camera unfocuses. The viewer is not sure what actually happened, but Kori freaks out, runs out of the bathroom, and slams the door. She goes to her kitchen and quickly drinks a glass of wine, trying to suppress what happened and rationalise it.

Middle :

She brushes the whole situation out of the way and begins preparing her dinner. She starts by cutting onions while thinking about how much she doesn't want to have an episode. She zones out, and she begins cutting faster and faster. The camera slightly shifts, and Kori slightly changes positions. The sounds of the onions being cut are slightly out of sync.

With the onions making her cry, her anxiety begins to spike, and with how fast she is cutting, she slightly cuts her finger. She runs her finger under water and continues cooking. She turns on the stove and cooks the onions. She decides to pour a bath to relax, and the bath starts running in the background.

She takes the onions off the stove and decides to put a record in her record player. She relaxes under the music, and suddenly she is dressed up, hair done, black dress, dancing with her boyfriend. She feels warm and safe, happy she had imagined everything else before, happy to be in the present, dancing. The camera's exposure reduces, just showing Kori dancing with a person dancing with her.

Just then, her phone gets a notification, and she is back in her kitchen, in the same position she was just in, in her fantasy. The onions she thought she had finished cooking are now burning on the stove, and the bath is running. She begins panicking slightly. She messages her boyfriend, saying she is too tired to meet, and cancels their plans.

Story treatment

End :

She grabs the glass of wine she thought she drank, but apparently didn't, and goes the bathroom and tries to relax. Her perception begins to fracture again, she's hold her head tightly trying to get it together. Her cameras exposures reduces again , in and out in and out, she breathing is multiplied and lanyard, as well as slightly delayed, the camera footage slightly corrupted but almost showing exactly what she is going through in her mind, layered actions of her. Until finally they disappear, but the cameras exposure, makes Kori out like a golden outline, exactly when she calms down, the camera cuts, and we see Kori outside in nature, a couple minutes later, she's at peace, she thinks that she back to “normal”. She touches the grass with her hands and stills down on the based of a tree, she breathes in finally relaxed finally at peace, she hasn't slept in a while , so she goes to sleep right now. Then she wakes up a couple hours later, in the same position in her room back against her bed. She wakes up from a notification and this triggers her final collapse, she thought she was free but when she tried to reach her phone her actions felt misaligned again, her sense of multiple selves returns again, she grabs her head and lets out a breaking cry.

The camera cuts from a second person pressing the off button, the video cuts.

the time on the camera jumps forward, but shes still in her kitchen dress up and dancing with her partner

her phone buzzes and she snaps out of it, the time a little later, but she feels that this is happing without the time cuts, she mssged her partner saying shes tierd and cancles their plans

she smells something burning , its the onions she thought she took off the stove.

she goes iinto the bath to try calm herself down
she beigins splitting agian, and the camera starts glitching , with multiple overlayes , the camera goes dark

kori is seen outside, in daylight in nature, she seems happy and finally at peace.

IDEA 3 : THE SUMMER WITH YOU

[back to
contents](#)

Ideation

GENRE : coming of age film

This film is heavily inspired by the film Call Me By Your Name, the creative direction behind the movie through the use of incorporating the 5 senses to really immerse the audience inside the film, and the nostalgic feeling it brought. This film incorporates a similar concept, adding the 5 senses to the film, the nostalgic feeling, and a coming-of-age film after the romance, filmed through the couple trying to hold on to each other through memories because they can't hold on to each other in real life, and then having to inevitably move forward with your life without that person.

Story treatment

GENRE :

coming of age film

REASERCH :

Short Film: Call Me By Your Name

Why: Same concept, adding sensory experiences for the viewers, colour grading in nostalgic moments, and cold blue colour grading in icy, sad moments.

LOG LINE :

While cleaning out her laptop storage, Rylie hesitates before deleting a video of a past summer romance, allowing herself one last time to immerse herself in memories of a love she has to let go of.

Story treatment

Beginging:

The film begins when Rylie hesitates to delete a video from her desktop. She knows she has to, to continue to live her life, but allows herself one more time. So she clicks the video, and it opens up to her summer love and the memories they experienced together.

Middle :

Act 2: Guitar in the Grass: This memory they recorded is of Olivia playing guitar and Riyle lying on her legs, listening to her. The mood is lazy; it's a warm afternoon.

Act 3: The Kitchen: This memory is of them cooking together, enjoying each other's company, also sitting on a window looking out into the day.

Act 4: The Fruit: This recording is of Olivia giving Riyle a mango, showing care and intimacy.

Act 5: The Walk: They walk outside in the late afternoon on a quiet street together.

Act 6: Fingers in the Grass: Adding sensory experience, allowing the audience to feel and smell the fresh soil in the summer season, lying next to each other side by side, cloud watching.

Act 7: The Ache of Realisation: They're outside reading, comfortable in silence.

Act 8: Don't Forget Me: They both know it's going to end. Olivia turns to Riyle and tells her not to forget her.

Story treatment

End :

At the end of the video, you can hear Riyle sniffle a bit, getting emotional. You can see through her webcam her emotions. After she deletes the video, she lets out a shaky exhale and moves away from her desk to go lie on her bed, looking outside her window to the place Olivia once was.

IDEA 4 : EYES TO HEAVEN

[back to

Ideation

GENRE : phycological thriller

Evie Adams is a pregnant physiology resident. She meets up with a patient, Micha Reed, who immediately picks up that she's pregnant. He begins saying things that freak her out. She analyses that he's a narcissist, psychopath undergoing religious psychosis, with deeply disturbing anger issues. Her maternal instincts kick in when she understands that her baby is in danger.

She calls security and flees the office. However, security says he left, the window wide open. They look around the establishment and outside too, but they can't find him. She's deeply unsettled.

When she leaves later in the evening after finishing a research paper, a series of events happen. Her tyres are slashed, she breaks down, she purchases pepper spray, she cannot sleep, she hears things, she gets paranoid, checks locks, feels like she's being watched, and hears scriptures being whispered. This happens over several days.

She goes back to the ward, noticeably distressed. She demands her boss she's working under do something. She explains the situation. She checks the chart; there's no Micha Reed in the system. She's confused and breaks down into a panic, yelling to check the cameras. When they check the footage of her meeting with him, there's no one there. It shows she walks in, sits down, talks to herself, freaks out, and runs out of the office.

She doesn't believe it. Her supervisor knows her mom suffered from schizophrenia and kindly insists that she stay overnight so he can keep her safe, with the intention of getting her medicated. She says no, she's fine, she knows he's there, and leaves.

She goes home and sets up a camera outside her door. She hears footsteps, and Micha bends down on the outside of the door and begins whispering, moving the locks. She's distraught and checks the cameras. No one is there. She looks up to heaven, and she begins whispering the same scriptures he was whispering, and she cries.
